LAD NEARLY DROWNED
IN PENNYPACK

John Collins, of Willow Grove, Bank While Bathing—Was Rescued by Raymond Sleigher—Was Found in Mud at Bottom of Stream—Taken to a Doctor.

John Collins, a lad in the employ of Samuel Hout, of Willow Grove, had a narrow escape from death on Tuesday night.

The boy was in swimming at the deep hole, in the Pennypack creek, near the railroad, at Heaton station, about eight o'clock in the evening. A party of boys was in the water at the same time and one or two sitting on the bank, all were sky-larking and having a good time, when Collins was missed. One of the persons on the bank remembered that he had seen the boy swim across the pool and thought he had either reached the other side or sunk.

He called the attention of Raymond Sleigher that he thought the lad had disappeared at a certain spot. Sleigher dove down at this point where the water was from six to eight feet deep and caught Collins by the hair. He found him lying face down in the mud. With the assistance of Mueser Moore, the lad was pulled to the shore. Sleigher handed rolled him over on the ground and worked his arms. The boy after some ten minutes of work regained consciousness. Collins was then placed in Wood Robinson's automobile and taken to a lively speed to the office of Dr. William Haxum, of Hatboro, who gave the lad some stimulant and completely revived him. Had the boy not been missed when he was, or had there not been a swimmer among the bathers with nerve sufficient to dive after the drowning lad, it would have been all up with Collins. As it was, he had a most narrow escape and owes his life to Sleigher and the assistance of the other boys, who gave a hand in the rescue.

When the boy was first pulled out of the water his face was covered with mud and it was thought by all that he was drowned.

In questioning Collins afterward he said that he was attempting to swim across the pool when all at once he lost his strength and sank. He did not give any warning.

PISTOL AND KNIFE
USED IN FIGHT

One Italian Shoots Another at Bottom Hill—Liquor and Love at Edge of Trouble—One Man in Hospital, Another in Jail.

Edge Hill has had another shooting affair. The Italians keep the police at Cheltenham busy with their many feuds and quarrels. This time, however, the shooting occurred across the line, at Abington township.

It appears that Joseph Moffa and Joseph Mattinello had been quarreling more or less for a year or more. On Monday these men met in an Edge Hill saloon and after some talk the quarrel was renewed.

Moffa, knowing that trouble was brewing, ran from the hotel to the church, where he hid. The bullet wounds are not of a very serious nature.

Mattinello was placed in the Abington lock-up and was given a hearing before Squire Williams and held to await a further hearing on this Friday night, when the condition of the injured man will be definitely known.

Just what the shooting was all about is not definitely known but it is thought that the trouble occurred over Mattinello having made love to Mattinello's wife, sometime back.

It is difficult indeed to get much light on these affairs as just as soon as the trouble occurs, the parties are every one connected with it, professing not to be able to understand the English language and as many of the members of different clubs, they are afraid if they testify against a prisoner, they will themselves be injured by the prisoner's friends.

The pistol shots drew the police and both men were placed under arrest. It was soon found that Moffa was so badly injured that he was sent to the Germantown hospital, where he is getting along very well considering his injuries. The bullet wounds are not of a very serious nature.

LIGHTNING FIRED
BIG CONCERT BARN

Cow and Pig and Chickens Burned When William Little's Barn was Destroyed—Firemen Reach Blaze Too Late to Save Building—Loss About $4000.

On last Wednesday morning during a severe electrical storm, the barn of William Little, located on the Berry and Worthington roads, near Somerton, was struck by lightning and totally destroyed. The damage is estimated at about $4000.

Mr. Little was not at home at the time of the fire, and before the fire company could be summoned from Bustleton, the fire was beyond control.

Cow, a pig and a number of chickens accompanied the storm, which swept over that section.

When lightning hit the Little barn, the fire spread rapidly and the crops which had been harvested were also destroyed. The damage is estimated at about $4000.

A strong wind and heavy downpour of rain accompanied the storm, which swept over that section.

WILLOW GROVE
RUSSIAN SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
COMING TO WILLOW GROVE PARK

The famous Russian symphony orchestra of New York, claimed by critics to be one of the greatest organizations of its kind in existence, begins a three weeks' engagement at Willow Grove Park, Sunday, July 16.

This orchestra consists of 55 skilled musicians, every one of which is an artist in his line and many of which are soloists of international reputation.

The leader, Modist Alscheuler, is a rare musical genius, having been a noted critic and musicologist long before his arrival in this country. He won the first medal in the great Moscow Conservatory, was long known as one of the foremost European cellists before devoting his time to musical theory and orchestra conducting.

Director Alscheuler is not the conventional conductor who attracts attention to himself by dramatic outbursts. On the contrary, he is a quiet, contained leader with sharp, forceful gestures. He is keenly alive to every instrument and every tone it should produce and the unusual vitality and precision is due to the fact that his leadership is not the result of a perfect ensemble which gives the superb effect to the music.

All critics agreed and saved that they could, but were not able to do much. The loss is partly covered by insurance.

The bringing of this wonderful musical organization to Willow Grove is indeed a rare treat and local interest has been stimulated for some weeks in anticipation of the fact.

PRUNING TREES

IMPROVE GROWTH
 Neglect in This Respect Will Often
 Cause Death of Vigorous Fruit Bearers.

Trees lose their lives by neglect more than old age. The orchard or fruit trees should be preserved by proper pruning and attention. Spraying, trimming and cultivation form the greater part in the conservation of life in fruit trees.

After young apple trees are planted they should be cut to a uniform height of about eighteen inches. Should there already be branches at about that height and the branches are evenly and widely distributed, there is no reason why the proper ones should not be selected and left to form the head of the tree. In selecting these branches, imagine as nearly as possible what their position and appearance will be when the tree is five or ten years old. Never allow branches to develop opposite each other on the main stem. This makes two knots at one place, which weakens a tree. If one branch happens to split off, the opposite one is sure to do so as soon as a heavy load comes on it.

If the apple tree is only a straight whip when it comes from the nursery, cut it off about eighteen inches high and select three or four (no more) branches located as described above, and rub off all the others which start so as to throw all the growth into the permanent branches. These should never be pinched back in order to make them branch the first year. All young trees should be allowed to make as much growth as possible, and if the branches are nipping back at one place, which weakens it should be most active. Experiment with apricot trees showed that the growth is retarded the growth more than one-half.

At the time of pruning, the permanent branches should be cut back to eight or ten inches and all others removed entirely. Trees of a spreading habit usually require pruning to inside buds in order to keep them from spreading too much. The idea is to remove the outer growth and carry on of the head, and pruning to inside buds at one time and outside buds at another, may be necessary. Sometimes an open space in a tree requires pruning to a point in that direction. Trees of the Northern Spy type usually require continual pruning to outside buds.

If the third and fourth pruning,
 the branches should be left a couple of feet long, as it is on these that fruit buds will develop later, and the tree will be all and strong enough to bear. At all of these prunings no more than two branches should be left to each branch of the previous year's growth. Subsequent prunings should be confined to pruning to inside buds of the tree properly thinned and stocky. If the tree is properly pruned till it is four years old there will never be any need of taking out large branches, at least not until the tree is so old that the trunk requires rebuilding back in order to rejuvenate it.

The small short branches or twigs that are left on the older wood should never be trimmed or broken off, for they are the fruit spurs.

Fruit trees should be pruned in the same way, the idea being to secure stout, well-balanced head that will admit sunlight to properly ripen and color the fruit and at the same time hold up a heavy load.

The chief difference between pruning the apple and pear is that the latter requires to be pruned to spread the top in most cases, while most apple trees are of a spreading nature.

Winter pruning increases the vigor
 of the plant.

Summer pruning decreases the vigor
 of the plant.

Root pruning decreases the vigor
 if the plant.

Prune weak-growing varieties heavily in the winter; strong-growing sorts lightly.

Suckers or waterprunes are often the effect of over-pruning.

Heading in thickens the top.
 Checking growth by striding, notching or twisting may induce fruitfulness, but at the expense of vigor.

Heavy pruning young trees delays fruiting.

All pruning must take into account the habit of growth of the tree.

Some fruits bear on this year's growth, as the cherry, plum, pear, and still others on older growth; pruning must take the age of bearing wood into account.

STORIES FOR IDLE HOURS

Under the Shadow of Baldhead

A Mining Expert Who Held Honor Above Love

By George Ethelbert Walsh
Copyright by American Press Association, Ill.

The sickly light from the single oil lamp gave a peculiarly weird, fantastic effect to the men seated around the plain pine table.

In the murky light the dark, heavy bearded faces took on a grimmer expression than by daylight, and the shifting gaze of eyes were of a nature to cause uneasiness. But Bertram had not followed his profession of expert mining engineer without ac-

"CHARLEY, ARE YOU IN THIS DEAL TOO?" quiring a certain amount of courage to carry him through unpleasant and even dangerous situations.

"Well, gentlemen," he exclaimed, after a nod of welcome from the circle, "I suppose you have something to say to me."

"You have finished the examination of the mine, I suppose," Mr. Bertram tentatively queried Carstark, a thick-set mining adventurer, who Bertram understood was at the head of the syndicate anxious to acquire the Baldhead mine.

"Yes, my work is finished, and I shall return in a few days to report to the owners."

"You haven't sent any word yet—by letter or by telegraph?"

"No, I have sent no word."

"And the report is to be?"

A flush of annoyance mounted to his cheeks at this unflattering question.

"My report is a matter of business secrecy with my employers," he answered simply, but with sharpness.

"We understand your position, Mr. Bertram," said Carstark. "Business honor—professional etiquette—makes you sensitive about giving us an inkling of your report. But as our offer for this mine is a liberal one and we have much at stake in the transaction you can realize our anxiety to know what you have found."

Bertram turned slowly toward the speaker and replied gravely:

"You know what my findings have been and can guess what the tenor of my report will be."

"Then your estimation of its value is far greater than the price we've offered. Would you mind stating what value you place on it?"

Bertram laughed.

"It would be dishonorable for me to do so," he replied quietly.

Topham, who up to this point had remained a passive listener, suddenly burst in and said sharply:

"What is your price for the information? We'll meet you on reasonable grounds."

Bertram swung around angrily, a sharp retort on his lips. But the row of grim faces dissuaded him. They were not men easily intimidated. The rugged, scarred faces were not pleasant to look at. With a sudden change of his features Topham took up his companion's lead and added:

"We'll not mince matters, Mr. Bertram. There are millions in that mine. You know it, and we know it. Send in a report to suit us and your fortune is made. One-fourth interest—a million or more will be your share."

The full extent of their plan was revealed by this blunt speech. Bertram disliked circumlocution, and now that he knew fully their scheme he breathed easier. He breathed easier for another reason. A fourth share of the mine meant that there were only three in the conspiracy. This left out Charley Ross—Charley, who had been so dear to him in the old college days. Good natured, but weak in character and easily led, Bertram had feared that the friend of his younger days had become involved in the swindle. It was for Charley's sake—and another's—that he had left the painfulness of his position.

When he came west in the interest of the owners of the Baldhead he had no thought of meeting Charley Ross. The reunion had been more pleasant because of the presence of another. Vera Ross had always been a shadowy myth to him. He had met her in the east, but always, it seemed to him, in the distance, in short dresses and plaited hair hanging down a slim, white neck. It was a pleasant and startling surprise to find her a woman in the full bloom of her maidenly beauty.

"I regret, gentlemen," he began slowly, but with such evident meaning in his words that the three men frowned.

Topham, impulsive and brutal in speech, interrupted quickly:

"You know the alternative."

He placed his hand menacingly on his hip.

"Wait one minute!"

Carstark held up a warning hand and moved toward the door. The others passively watched him, and Bertram instinctively sensed new danger. The door opened and closed behind the man, then opened again and admitted another. Bertram looked through the smoke laden atmosphere at the newcomer and then started visibly.

"Charley—you here?" he said abruptly.

Charley Ross, vigorously supported by Carstark in the rear, stepped half willingly toward the center of the room. His eyes did not look at his friend and his bronzed face was pale. Bertram surveyed him silently and appreciatively.

"Charley," he said softly, "I am sorry that you have come. This is no place for us. Come away with me."

For reply the boy—he was not much more than a boy in looks—glanced swiftly down the row of grim faces and then pleadedly into the eyes of Bertram.

"Charley, are you in this deal, too?" Bertram asked sorrowfully.

The boy, with the eyes of his sister, nodded, his lips refusing to perform their duty.

"And you wish me to make a false report to the mine's worth to my employers—no?"

He stopped, the words choking him. Then, with a smile on his lips, he said firmly:

"But I cannot do it, not even for your sake, Charley."

"Then—then do it for—for Vera's sake."

Had the man struck him in the face he could not have made a deeper impression on Bertram. His cheeks went suddenly pale and then flushed hotly. What right had even Charley to use his sister's name in such an infamous bargain? He turned as if to resent it with all the strength of his nature.

"You mean that for Vera's sake?" Bertram stammered brokenly, his eyes still averted.

"You mean it?" Bertram repeated in a hollow voice.

The boy gulped convulsively and then, like one repenting a half forgotten lesson, murmured:

"Yes, Willard, I—I mean it—for Vera's sake. We—we needs the money, and it will make life so different to her."

The lips refused to speak the blundering speech further. The sounds died in a guttural murmur in his throat.

Bertram slowly dropped his hand and unthinkingly toward the table. With trembling hands he took a blank sheet of paper from his pocket, unwrapped his fountain pen and wrote. Without looking at the paper or attempting to blot the ink, he handed it to the boy and said:

"Charley, here is my answer."

Over his shoulder Charley read the words. The frown on his face deepened, and then a smile broadened his features. In his eagerness he snatched the paper from Charley's hand and passed it around to his companions. It was a telegram briefly worded:

Messrs. Black, Whitely & Co., New York City: Have made a thorough examination of Baldhead mine. It is worth about the offer made—very little more. Fuller report by mail.

WILLARD BERTRAM.

"You may send that gentlemen, in my name," Bertram said, with a sneer, "and my report by mail will be of the same tenor."

Carstark stepped forward and extended a hand. Bertram pushed it away angrily.

"I do not want your congratulations nor your money," he said hotly, striding toward the door.

"But your share," Carstark began greedily.

Bertram turned at the door and dashed for the last time, his eyes blazing.

"Do you think I would touch any of your money, you dastardly coward? I do it because—because—"

Then he flung himself from the room, his whole body trembling with excitement and wrath.

From the shadows of the cabin a dark figure flitted, crossing a patch of moonlight to the darkened blotch of stunted trees beyond. Bertram gave a sudden start and then followed. He caught up with the figure just as it was disappearing in the shadow of the trees.

"Vera!" he called softly.

"Vera!" he repeated as the figure continued onward in its flight.

A few more quick strides brought him abreast of her, and then, standing athwart the pathway, he compelled her to halt or turn aside.

"Vera," he said for the third time. "Vera, you have heard all."

She did not answer, but he needed no words to convince him.

"Vera," he went on tenderly, reaching out to grasp her hand, but she withdrew it swiftly and struck back a pace. Unwavered by the action and strangeness of the girl's look, he went on with his declaration. "If you heard all you know what I would say to you now."

She checked him with a mute gesture.

triumph. The mine is not worth more than they offered the owners. The vein of gold which they thought meant fabulous wealth to them is a false mine. It does not extend down a dozen feet. I knew that before went to the meeting, and I shall report to the owners. In their eagerness to perfect this swindle and make me and poor Carstark a party to it they have actually paved the way to their own ruin. Let them have the mine! It will never reward them for their villainy."

The moon's white light was obscured by the peak of old Baldhead, and the grim shadow cast athwart the landscape encompassed them. When it deepened so their figures were invisible they were entwined as one. In the cabin near by the three conspirators gloated over their blundering swindle, a heartless boy covering before them in abject mental torture.

But the lovers waited long and patiently for his release. He waited until the dew of the night grew heavy and chilly—the glow of a new day had begun to dawn in a new light and awakened the senses of the world of nature. Then he came, and love made amends for poor, weak, frail, human nature.

Yep, get a lot of them big grubs. What's near the apple tree. They're just the stuff for them white chubs. We'll catch a lot, you'll see.

An' tell your man we're givin' soon. We want some hard b'read 'n' cheese. An' tender chicken legs.

An' don't forget the bottle. It's on that upper shelf. It ain't no good for nothing. I want it all myself.

There's a lot of fish in the swamp. Fish are a drink right now. We'll start to fishin' over there. Boodle that ole mud now.

Moorey! Oh, won't we catch the fish? There's a lot of 'em 'bout here. An' use the toughest twine you got. The net is awful strong.

MISS STINSON'S CHARITY VOID

Supreme Court Decides That Witness

Was Interested in Bequest.

A charity bequest in the will of Agnes J. Stinson, of Norristown, Pa., has been ruled out by the State Supreme Court, which holds that Miss Stinson's action in naming one of the witnesses to her will as manager of the proposed Women's Christian Association to be conducted in her own home was a violation of an act of Assembly relating to a charity, which requires the witnesses to a will to be entirely disinterested in the proposed charity.

Miss Stinson left as her heirs eight cousins, and the contest over the will has been waged for three years. The estate is worth about $100,000, which now goes to the heirs.

ELLEN TURNER DEAD AT 92.

The death of Ellen Turner, which occurred at the residence of Mrs. Henry R. Brown, 933 Swede street, Norristown, on Sunday morning marked the close of an unusual career of seventy-one years continuous and faithful service to the community. She was born in Banden, Ireland, and came to live in the family of the late Alfred Hurst in 1840. For twenty-six years past, until her death, she has lived in the family of Mr. Hurst's daughter, Mrs. William H. Yerkes and Mrs. Henry R. Brown.

The deceased was in her ninety-third year, was a life-long member of the Episcopal church and was highly esteemed by all who knew her.

While picking cherries, Miss Annie

Schulke, of Hatfield, fell from a stepladder and broke her arm.

Eugene A. Perry, of North Wales, has filed through Judge Henry J. Fox, action for divorce from his wife,

Eleanor Perry. Desertion is alleged.

While visiting friends in Philadelphia, Mrs. Llewellyn P. Tomlinson, of Newtown, fell down a flight of steps and broke one of her arms in three places.

Miss Julia Y. Atkinson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard W. Atkinson, will establish a preparatory school for girls at Oakland, Doylestown, during the coming fall.

The two acres of strawberries of

Miss Jane B. Haines at the Pennsylvania School of Horticulture for women, near Jarrettsville, yielded about $900 in cash this season.

After hearing testimony in a deserta-tion case, Judge Staples, at Doylestown, asked Mrs. Edith Phillips, of Hilltown, whether she was willing to live with her husband again, and upon her reply that she was not, dismissed

the case.

Letters testamentary have been granted in the estate of Eliza Heacock, of Cheltenham, to Martha Heacock, she bequeaths her estate to her sisters, Gaynor, Annie, Jane and Martha Heacock. The will was executed in 1893.

A horse driven by Mrs. Watson

Stoop, of Taylorville, trifled with the approach of an automobile, smashed the wagon and injured the woman and three children. Mrs. Stoop and her eldest daughter were removed to a Trenton hospital.

According to the returns of the assessors, Bucks county has 90 more girls than boys of school age, there being 6449 girls and 6459 boys, or a total of 12,908. Bristol takes the lead with 1637, and then follow Quaker-town, Perkasie and Doylestown.

Corporal punishment is said to have been administered by a farmer near Norristown, when he captured

three Trenton girls—helping themselves to his cherries a few days ago.

After being spanked and generally roughly handled the girls made their get-away, leaving a pair of stockings and a fancy pocketbook containing 31 cents.

Phoebe Holcombe, a widow living on North Chancellor street, Newtown, who had been sick with subacute pneumonia and in charge of a nurse, arose from her bed one night recently,

and fell heavily down the stairs, on her head and face. She broke two bones in her left wrist, sprained her right wrist, bruised her head badly, and broke her teeth, causing severe lacerations of the lip and nose. Her injuries are very painful.

Historical Society's Annual Outing.

Plans for the annual fall outing of the Historical Society of Montgomery county on Saturday, October 7, provide for an interesting day's journey with

Worcester as the destination, stopping on the way to visit the old Norristown church and the home of David Rittenhouse, the Worcester Schwenkfelder church, the Matheon Meetinghouse with the grave of the second Christopher

Sauer, Wontz church, Center Point, and St. John's Lutheran church at Centre Square. The main literary program will be given in Farmers' Hall,

Centre Point, after the luncheon which will be served at that place. At each of the other stopping places there will be a brief address comprehending the principal points of historical interest in connection therewith.

TIMELY RECIPES

GREEN CORN OMELET.

Take four good-sized ears of corn, score the rows lengthwise and scrape out the pulp. Mix with five well-beaten eggs, one tablespoonful of cream, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper. Heat a frying pan and drop into it one teaspoonful of butter and shake until the bottom is evenly greased. Pour in the mixture, shake it and tilt the pan until it is evenly cooked. Roll and serve quickly on a heated platter.

BRISTOL COOKIES.

A cupful of milk, one of sugar, one-half cupful of butter, one-half nutmeg, two eggs, one teaspoonful of soda and flour enough to roll. Beat the butter and sugar to cream, then add the eggs, well beaten. Dissolve the soda in the milk, which stir into the mixture. Finally add the flour

CREAMED ONION ENTREE.

A simple but delicious entree is made in this way. Peel a good-sized onion and cook in butter, and a little hot water to prevent browning. When the onion is soft and mushy make a cream sauce in the dish in which the onion has been cooked, using two tablespoonfuls of butter and four and a cup of rich milk or cream, with pepper and salt for seasoning. Stir the onion into the sauce and serve hot in ramekins with fingers of hot buttered toast.

FRESH AIR FOR THE POOR

Another Fine Outing Place Established Above Torresdale.

Cloverbrook, a summer home for poor children, that opened its doors

some weeks ago at Cornbury, near Torresdale, Pa., has already had 100 small children within its comfortable plains. The managers have become so thoroughly convinced of its practical value during this period that they are now endeavoring to raise money to purchase the place. At present it is rented from an estate for the season, which is paid by popular subscription.

The place is on the Pennsylvania Railroad, near Bristol, and the house is surrounded by immense oak and maple trees, which furnish plenty of shade for the children, as the 17 acres of ground that go with it furnish plenty of room for play. Besides contributions for the purchase of the place, the Board of Managers will be able to receive gifts of toys, books, hammocks, loads of sand and other things which make for the happiness and comfort of children.

Grandma Turner's Beau

How Love's Afterglow Came to Dixie Turner
By CLARISSA MACKIE
Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Miss Dixie Turner opened the door wide to admit the bulky figure of her neighbor.

"My land, but it's come of cold, Dixie," shivered Beulah Norton as she bowed close to the warm kitchen fire. "I thought my knitted shawl would be plenty warm enough, but it seemed like I had nothing on."

"Sit down, Beulah; here's my rocker. Don't you want some hot spiced cider? I was just going to fix some for myself." Miss Dixie brought a jug of sweet cider from the cellar and poured a quantity into a stone pitcher and set it on the stove to heat. She added some nutmeg and ginger and stirred it carefully. When it was hot and steaming she poured the cider into two large blue mugs and brought out a plate of doughnuts.

"When I passed the old Bunderman place the wind was howling in those louca's till it drove you crazy. I wonder at Howard wanting to go back there to live again." Beulah watched Dixie's startled face with furtive eyes.

"I didn't know Howard had come back, Beulah. I thought he was settled in Omaha."

"So he was, but—your know Lucy died most a year ago and left him with those two little girls on his hands. I guess he found it hard work doing for them and keeping at his job, too, so he came east a few days ago, thinking Beulah would take care of them so he could get work in the mine. I guess he thought she'd be glad to have him back home again."

"Did he know she was married?" asked Dixie curiously.

"No more than any of the rest of the village suspected it might happen. Captain Lee, he's been real mean about courting Estelle, and then their striking off to the city and getting married last Saturday was the biggest surprise Ferrville ever had. 'Twasn't like a boy and girl elopement—your expect that—but Estelle Bunderman and Captain Lee are both over forty, and nobody cared whether they ever got married or not."

"Who's taking care of the little girls?" asked Dixie rather diffidently.

"Beulah reddened and for the first time appeared flustered. "I am," she said blantly.

"You are? I didn't know you cared much about children," remarked Dixie slowly.

"I don't especially, but I have plenty of time, and ma said we might as well help Howard out till he got a house-keeper. You can't guess what that young one's called?" she repeated.

"I can't guess unless it's after Lucy's Aunt Hyacinth Moore," suggested Dixie, rising to her slender height. "I remember when Lucy and I went to school together she used to think her aunt had the loveliest name in the world."

"She wasn't named after her mother's Aunt Hyacinth Moore," mimicked Beulah, rather crossly. "Lucy Bunderman was a awful temper, and I guess her—conscience kind of bothered her the way she'd acted toward some folks, so she named the second little girl after one of her schoolmates. I must be going now. Good-by."

When Beulah's red shawl had flicked over her head she turned back to the sunlit room and sat down once more.

An attack of neuralgia had confined her to the house for several days, and consequently she had not heard of Howard Bunderman's return to Ferrville. Nearly every pleasant day when she went down to the postoffice she passed the Bunderman place, and whenever she saw Estelle's pale face behind the door or window she waved a hand in greeting, and sometimes Miss Bunderman would come out to see her and chat for awhile. But she never mentioned her brother nor anything about his affairs to Dixie Turner. Indeed, no one in Ferrville was aware of repeating Howard's name to Dixie's hearing.

"What's the news, Dixie? Something's happened—your face is real pink."

"I guess it was the spiced cider I've been drinking," evaded Dixie as she moved to and fro preparing the tonic. "Beulah was real cold when she came in, and I heated some cider, and besides, the kitchen's getting most too hot."

"What's the news?" persisted Mrs. Turner, making a horrible face over the medicine.

"You know Estelle and Captain Lee went to the city and got married last Saturday."

"Of course I know, Dixie. I know! You told me yourself. I guess I knew what Beulah Norton came up to tell you."

"She looked narrowly at the younger woman.

"What then?" asked Dixie defiantly. Mrs. Turner folded her wrinkled hands and looked out of the window.

"Beulah came up to tell you that Howard Bunderman had come back. I've known it ever since he came. Dixie. Somebody run in and told me when you was down to the postoffice. I feel dreadful sorry for that poor fellow. I guess he had a hard row to hoe with Lucy Moore, though I bet he tried to do his duty by her. And after she died he must have found it hard happy over the way she'd treated you. They say before she died she named the second little girl after you."

"After me?" Dixie's face radiated with a strange glow. "Did Lucy name her little girl after me?"

"Yes," snapped grandmother sternly. "Twas the least she might do after making so much trouble all around you. I wanted to marry Jim Turgeon but he didn't want her, so she got around Howard and married him. He said she was a clever one. She fixed it so he couldn't get out of it, and first thing you know he was engaged to her instead of you."

"How did you know?"

"It came direct from Lucy herself," returned Mrs. Turner, knitting busily. "The Howard married Lucy Moore he came here and told me he loved her. He said he knew it looked as if he was a coward and a villain, but he asked me what to do. He said he didn't like anybody but you and he'd never be happy if he married anybody else. I advised him to go and tell Lucy what he told me. He did tell her, and she said she'd rather marry him even if he didn't love her a bit, and so he did. Dixie Turner, Howard Bunderman is a hero. What are you going to give me for supper?"

"I'll cook you a poached egg, grandmother," said Dixie in a queer little tone as she kissed the gray hair beneath the old lady's cap.

"I'd like a bit of early," went on the indignant old voice. "I'm rather expecting a bean tonight. He came last evening and talked to me through this window when you was across the street. I told him he better come to-night. I hope you don't mind my having a bean, Dixie? What—say?" she called after her granddaughter.

Dixie turned suddenly and came back. Kneeling beside Mrs. Turner, she dropped her head against the bent little shoulder.

"Isn't it beautiful, grandma?" she whispered. "It's wonderful after doing all those things Lucy girl after me—after me! Somehow it seems as if it's happier now than it was before anything happened at all. I wonder why?"

Mrs. Turner was looking out at the red and gold sunset that crowned the short November day. "After suffering from the greatest joy, and it comes just when you're settled down to dreariness. Hark, was that the gate? Hurry, Dixie. I believe my beau is coming now!"

Justification.
"You admit, then, do you, O'Shaughnessy, that you assented your friend?" asked the judge, looking at Jones.
"Sure an Oi do, that you honor," replied O'Shaughnessy. "Yur gov'nor a couple of good wans. He called me a damned good yur honor."

"And did you consider that an insult?" demanded the judge.
"Now, sir," said O'Shaughnessy. "O'f course it was a gross betrayal of confidence, sir."—Harper's Weekly.

Apple wood logs were sluring and slazing in the drum store, and there was the pleasant odor of cedar from the old lady's open cedar chest.

"About time you took your tonic, grandma," suggested Dixie. "I forgot all about it. Have you been lonesome in here?"

"Not a mite, Dixie. I'm too busy to be lonesome. I heard Beulah Norton's voice in the kitchen, and I was so scared I thought she'd come in here and 'n't abide her." Mrs. Turner patted her needles into the wool and jabbed for breath. Her black eyes sought her granddaughter's face with a keen inquiry.

HATBORO HOME HAPPENINGS

BUSINESS MEN MEET.

How Residents Hit by Time Table Change—Patrons Home Merits—No Street Oiling—Bridge Fixing.

Business Men's Association held interesting meeting at Town hall on Tuesday afternoon. Members present were Dr. Thomas Ridd, and Warren Cornell read the minutes of the previous meeting.

A discussion regarding the action of the railroad taking effect on the morning train, was gone into at length and the Public Service Commission was asked to confer with the railroad, showing them just how this hits our town, as it will prevent anyone living in Hatboro from going to the city in time to be at work seven o'clock in the morning. It was shown that some eight or twelve persons of the borough use this train daily and that they would either have to leave their place of employment on the town.

The matter of hucksters coming to the town and peddling their wares was discussed. The matter was to be placed before the selectmen. The matter of the town council was also passed. Resolved, that it is the opinion of this Association that the selectmen be requested to petition the county to have the people of this community as far as possible, to patronize our local stores.

The placing of a foot bridge over the Pennypack creek was also talked of and it was shown that the bridge was erected about 1754 by the county. An effort is to be made to have the County Commissioners widen the bridge by the addition of a foot path or by continuing the arches.

James Jones was placed on the committee to see that the town is properly lighted and it is thought that if others interested in this work would join the committee, it would be of great benefit to the town.

Utterly Wretched

Nervous Prostration Long Endured Before Remedy was Found.
Mrs. Minerva Reminger, Upper Bern, Pa., writes: "For many years I had nervous prostration, and was utterly wretched. I lived on bread and beef tea because my stomach would not retain anything else. I took many remedies, but obtained no relief until I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, when I began to gain at once. Am now cured."
Pure, rich blood makes good, strong nerves, and this is why Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies and cleanses the blood, cures so many nervous diseases. Get it today in usual liquid form. Chocolate tablets called Sarsabats.

MAD DOG BIT GIRL.

Pasteur Treatment Given Little Daughter of Mr. Fisher, of Rushland, and Valuable Dog of Amos Patterson.

An unusual experiment was tried at Wycombe a few days ago when several dogs and a child of Mr. Fisher, of Rushland, were bitten by a mad dog. As soon as it was found that the child was bitten by a strange dog that showed all symptoms of rabies the rabies treatment was decided upon. Later it was learned that a valuable hunting dog belonging to Amos Patterson was also a victim. As it was one of the finest hunting dogs in this part of the State Mr. Patterson was unwilling to take any chances and anxious to try any experiment to save its life. So it was decided to use the Pasteur treatment on the dog.
The supply of the great cure for both child and dog arrived, but in spite of every precaution the dog developed rabies and died a day later. The little daughter of Mr. Fisher is getting along nicely and there seems no doubt she will recover.
Several dogs were bitten, and those that were not killed are being closely watched.

ARRESTED AT WILLOW GROVE

Four Young Men Suspected of Trying to Pick Pockets Among Crowd at Park.

Four alleged pickpockets, all claiming residence in Philadelphia, were held Sunday at the County Jail, Monday day for a further hearing Saturday night, by Magistrate Williams, at the Abington police station. The men were captured by special policemen at Willow Grove last Sunday.
The prisoners gave their names as Jacob Billest, Morris Maxwell, Thomas Cohen and Israel Kaufman. All are young men.
It was between 4 and 5 o'clock last Sunday afternoon when the officers of the four young men first attracted the notice of the detectives. The detectives declare they saw them attempt to steal valises and jewelry from visitors at the park. The arrests were made so quietly that only a few people in the vicinity knew of them. The suspects were held prisoners at the park station until early evening, when they were removed to Abington.

OBITUARY

DAVID NEWPORT.

David Newport, one of the most prominent members of the Society of Friends in the eastern part of Pennsylvania, died Sunday, at "Evergreen," his farm at Willow Grove. Mr. Newport was nearly 90 years of age, and a few months ago fractured his leg in a fall. The result of this injury, to which his advanced years and the intense heat, hastened the end. Mr. Newport was born in Philadelphia in 1822, and was a remarkable man in many ways. He received a common school and academic education, and embarked in business. In 1851 he was made a revenue collector for a wide portion of Pennsylvania, with offices at Norristown. This was the only political preferment he ever desired or filled, although some of his writings were along political lines. One of his best known efforts was his "Lincoln and Liberty." His religion was that of the Friends, and in recent years he has been a notable figure at the meetings held in the Abington Friends' Meeting at Jenkintown.

For a number of years deceased was connected with the firm of William C. Newport & Co., manufacturers of phosphates for agricultural purposes at Willow Grove. The firm dissolved upon the death of his son and for the past decade or more he has lived retired on his farm on Welsh road, west of Willow Grove.

Deceased was a descendant of Thomas Newport, who settled in New Jersey about 1688, coming from London, England. In referring to his ancestors David Newport said in his "Endeavour": "It is said to be difficult to name the eight different great-grandfathers of an individual. The following are mine: Ebenezer Newport and Mary Long, Thomas Wood and Mary Long, John Barker and Elizabeth Roden, John Elmer (d. 1840) and Elizabeth Daugherty."

He was a fluent speaker and writer and contributed frequently to the columns of the Spirit. He published a volume of poems, "The Pleasures of Home," and volumes of "Indices Historical and Rational," and "Endeavour, Spiritual and Rational: the Apology of the Friends of the Society." His widow, who survives him, was a Miss Susan Satterthwaite, of Philadelphia, a granddaughter of the Rev. Dr. the maker of the first American flag. Recently they observed the sixty-fourth anniversary of their marriage. He also survived by a daughter, Mrs. Canby Tyson, one grand-daughter, and great-grandchildren.

The funeral took place on Wednesday morning, with services at Abington Meeting.

Among the speakers at the funeral were Alvin Haines, Alfred Loe, Elwood Roberts, Henry Wilbur, Emma Gaskill, Elizabeth Ely, Mary Travilla, Anna Speakman and others.

ELIZABETH S. YERKES.

Elizabeth S. Yerkes, wife of Stephen Yerkes, and daughter of the late Louis Major George Chamberlain, of Hartsville, died at her home in Westminster, Tuesday morning, July 11, 1911, at the age of 84 years.

Mrs. Yerkes was a most estimable woman and leaves a wide circle of friends, but it is a home where her loss will be felt most keenly. She is survived by her husband and two daughters, Louise Amy and Elizabeth J. Yerkes, also a sister, Mrs. Jennie Conrad, and two brothers, George Jamison, of Hartsville, and John Jamison, of Doylestown. Her funeral was held on Friday, burial at Neshaunim cemetery at Hartsville.

RACHEL WYNKOOP LUFF.

Miss Rachel Wynkoop Luff died at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Luff, Washington street, Newtown, Saturday evening, July 8, 1911. She was a graduate of the New York High School and was a student at the West Chester State Normal School. About fourteen weeks ago she was attacked with appendicitis while at the Normal and was operated on at the West Chester Hospital. Complications set in and resulted in her death. She was survived by her parents, two brothers and three sisters.

WILLIAM J. GILLINGHAM.

William James Gillingham, for many years a resident of Philadelphia, died last Monday in Easton, Md. He was 72 years of age. He was the father of Albert J. Gillingham, author of the passenger receipts of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who lives at 5343 Greene street, Baltimore. Mr. Gillingham, Jr., general agent of the Hall Sign Company, Chicago, was also a son of Mr. Gillingham, of Easton, Md.

Mr. Gillingham was born in Buckingham, Berks county, February 1819. He was president of the Friends' Home for Children, head of the Northern Soup Society and active in the work of the Society of Friends.

GEORGE HEBERTON.
George Heberton, aged 90 years, widely known in financial circles, died Saturday at the country residence of his son, George V. G. Heberton, East Lane Manor, Chestnut Hill. He was head of the brokerage firm of G. & W. T. Heberton, and a veteran member of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, dating his membership from 1847. For years he was active in Presbyterian church work and served as delegate to several General Assemblies. During the civil war he was quartermaster sergeant of Company G, Eighth Pennsylvania Regiment. One son and a daughter survive him.

MUNICIPAL WATER PLANT AND SEWERS FOR BRISTOL

Bristol Council has authorized the purchase of the plant of the Bristol Water Company for $112,440 and has awarded the contract for the construction of a new water system with a sewage disposal plant to a Philadelphia firm for $77,561.85.
The purchase and construction of these public improvements possible, Joseph R. Grundy, chairman of the water and sewerage committee, has offered to make up the differences in price between the bond issue authorized and the figures named for the water works. For the water works a bond issue of $100,000 was authorized and for the sewage system the people had voted favorably on a $50,000 issue.

Added to this, Mr. Grundy has announced his intention of erecting at his own expense a reserve fire fighting water tank costing $8000.

FIRE COMPANY AFFAIRS.

Naturally more interest is being taken in the affairs of the fire companies since the Hattershaw and every one appears to be wakening up to the fact that it is necessary to equip the companies with hose and other apparatus. Had the company had fifty feet more of hose at the Heller fire, which would have cost $27.60, the fire loss would have been $500 less. With this fifty feet the line of hose could have been extended to the rear where the fire started. At the regular meeting on Friday night it was voted to immediately purchase 300 feet additional hose and ten feet more of suction hose. There were many samples offered from other hose manufacturing companies but the contract was awarded to the Hayward Company, who offered four months time for the payment. It is now necessary to secure a hose carriage and a special meeting will be held on Monday where the chief will present several attractive offers. The hose carriage is necessary as it is impossible to carry 500 or 600 feet of hose on the hand engine. The new hose will cost almost $230 to be paid in three months. The carriage is offered on six months time. The fire company had on hand January 1, 1911, $100.00 in cash, $100.00 in donations, receipts from sales, entertainments, etc., sufficient to run the company up to $100.00. It has spent for equipment, supplies, repair, etc., $27.64. This leaves a balance in the treasury of $72.36 and bills amounting to $27.64. A fund of $50 is reserved out of the $72.36 toward a building fund. It has been decided to have a large hook and chain made and Mr. Grundy will have it made.

If it is decided to buy hose carriage, it will require hard work to secure new equipment. The next meeting on Monday will be held at 8 o'clock at the Watson home where Mrs. W. B. Brubaker will have charge of the putting down of the seven miles of pipe in Newtown streets, which will supply our residents with gas.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS.

It over they would get rid of the pest. They could sow crimson clover immediately afterward, or, if weather conditions are favorable they can harrow it, and sow red clover and get a stand before fall.

MILDEW OF ROSES.

A Franklin county correspondent recently wrote to Professor H. A. Surface, at Harrisburg, Pa., asking what the trouble with his Crimson Rambler roses, of which he sent specimen for examination. Professor Surface replied as follows:

"The crimson Rambler which you sent is infected with mildew. This can be remedied by spraying with one ounce of potassium sulfide or five of sulfur in each gallon of water, or one gallon of concentrated lime-sulfur solution, either home-brewed or commercial, in twenty-five gallons of water. Dusting with sulfur while the leaves are damp will also have a beneficial effect in curing the mildew. In fact, it seems that sulfur and its compounds are efficient in checking this plant disease.

The mildew attacks not only roses, but also violets, pees, grapes, cherry, and, in fact, a whole host of plants. The same remedy is to be recommended on all.

The diseased leaf is known by its smaller size, curled appearance, and especially its whitish color due to the powder spores of the mildew upon it, though it had been dusted with flour."

POTATO BLIGHT.

At this season of the year Professor H. A. Surface, State Zoologist, Harrisburg, Pa., is receiving many inquiries from persons as to the proper treatment of Potato blight. The following information recently sent to Potomac inquirer will be found helpful to others:

"As a remedy for potato blight, you can spray with either Bordeaux mixture or with dilute lime-sulfur solution. The Bordeaux mixture is made by dissolving three pounds of blue-stone, and four pounds of lime in fifty gallons of water. If you have a few beetles or 'bugs' present, add two or three pounds of arsenate of lead to this.

The lime-sulfur solution will probably do as well as the Bordeaux mixture, this is not fully proven, although I used it all right three years ago. This is made by using one gallon of the strong lime-sulfur solution, either homemade or commercial, in twenty-five gallons of water."

In making the Bordeaux mixture dissolve the copper sulfate (blue-stone) by suspending it over night in a burlap bag just beneath the surface of the water, (or put it in boiling water, using at least one quart to the pound), and dilute to 25 gallons. Soak the lime in sufficient water to prevent burning. Dilute to 25 gallons, strain and add to the copper sulfate solution, stirring the mixture vigorously while mixing."

THE BLISTER BEETLE.

There are several species of insects commonly known as Blister Beetles, which are similar in form and habits, and differ chiefly in color. They generally come in great numbers about midsummer, and attack vegetation of various kinds, the chief of which is the white of Irish potato. They have been injurious to potatoes ever since the first planting of that useful vegetable, and for that reason are called the Old-fashioned potato bug.

The proprietor of a department store in the central part of Pennsylvania has a farm on which he has started a field of alfalfa. He found some of these Blister beetles recently devouring the young alfalfa, and sent specimens to State Zoologist H. A. Surface, at Harrisburg, who replied as follows:

"The beetle which you sent to us is a Blister beetle or Old-fashioned potato bug. It has been reported to us several times recently as injuring alfalfa. They are poisoned only slowly, and can be killed by spraying with one ounce of arsenate of lead in each gallon of water. Of course, a person hesitates to use this on his forage crop. I believe that the best manner of getting rid of them is to make up a bundle of switches, so as to hold one such bundle in each hand, and whip them out of the field or vines, or you can place bundles of straw here and there, and easily whip them into the straw, and then set fire to them. They are peculiar in the fact that they can be driven, and when sufficiently severely treated they will leave the place where they have had rough treatment. They often destroy potatoes, and there they can be better overcome by bundles of straw between the vines in the rows, and whipping them into this, and setting fire to it. The survivors will depart for other regions. These insects are sometimes called Blister beetles for the reason that when crushed upon one's skin, as upon the hands or arms they will produce blisters. The larva live in the soil and feed upon small insects and other organisms there, and are beneficial. There are several species of adults, which are liable to feed upon the foliage of several kinds of vegetation."

FOR LICE ON POULTRY.

From a poultryman in Chester, Pa., State Zoologist, H. A. Surface, received at Harrisburg a letter, stating that his poultry is infested with lice of different kinds, and asked what to do to destroy them. The reply was as follows:

There are two distinct groups of Chicken lice, the little red ones which are mostly on the fowls at night, and remain during the day on perches or in the nests, or elsewhere in the poultry house, or near their roosting places; and, second, those which remain on the fowls practically all the time. These are generally larger, and gray in color.

For the former, the best thing to do is to spray the poultry house thoroughly with kerosene or kerosene emulsion, or strong lime-sulfur solution, or strong soap solution, or perhaps best of all a five per cent. kerosene solution. One part kerosene in twenty parts of water will destroy everyone that it touches, and will act as a fumigant to destroy disease germs, as well as destroying the lice. At the same time, change the old straw in the nests, burning the old straw, and spray or wash the empty nest boxes.

For the lice of the fowls, you should dust them with a mixture of flowers of sulfur, hellebore, tobacco dust, and pyrethrum, about equal parts, holding the fowls by the feet head downward, and rub this dust well into the feathers. I think you can obtain some literature on this subject from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

MOW AND BURN STRAWBERRY LEAVES NOW.

Now that the strawberry crop has been gathered is the proper time for mowing the leaves of the plants as low as possible with a scythe or mower, and letting them cure quickly, then raking them together within the rows and burning them. Straw should be added if necessary to make enough fuel to burn the leaves. This is the common method of the most practical strawberry growers in suppressing insect pests and plant diseases, and renewing the old strawberry rows or beds, which should also be properly cultivated and hoed. It is for this reason that State Zoologist H. A. Surface replied, from Harrisburg, to one of the instructors in the Pennsylvania School of Horticulture for Women, saying:

"The best method of getting rid of the leaf curler on strawberries is to mow the leaves now, which is just after the fruit has been gathered, as soon as possible. Some persons throw a little straw between the vines and mow the leaves, rake them on to the straw and burn them. This gets rid of both plant disease germs and insect pests, and is recommended as proper. It is practiced by some of our best berry growers."

NEAR DEATH IN TRENCH

Abington Cave-in Victim Nearly Unconscious When Rescued From Ditch.

Buried under tons of earth by a cave-in at Abington Friday, Henry Mills, a trench digger living at No. 1509 East Washington Lane, Germantown, was saved by fellow workmen with difficulty from suffocation. Mills went to work Friday morning digging a ditch on one of the Abington streets. While alone at the bottom of the excavation one of the walls gave way and he was knocked down and covered up by the falling earth. By the time other workmen had removed enough of the ground around his body to allow him to breathe he was in a semi-conscious condition. When taken to the Jewish Hospital Mills was found to be suffering from a sprained back, many body bruises and internal injuries.

A male chorus choir has been organized at the Doylestown Presbyterian church.

A bill has been introduced into City Councils to provide another park for the people of the east side of Germantown. The purpose of the bill is to select the plot of ground bounded by Chelton avenue, Magnolia street, and grave street and Price street as an open public place for the health and enjoyment of the people. This is the unimproved tract of land opposite St. Vincent's Seminary. It has been used for some years as a baseball and athletic ground.

Positive relief from excessive heat of whatever degree can be promptly had by a wet cloth applied to the top of the head and allowed to remain there during the day, if practicable. The fabric need not necessarily be ice cold, although that condition is arduously more pleasant. A piece of dry or only disagreeably damp, with no air stirring, the same relief can be obtained by keeping a wet cloth upon the front part of the head. By this simple method sleep will come, and the waking hour will find one greatly refreshed. This is the simple and efficacious remedy used by the writer upon the western plains and across the deserts of Colorado, Utah, Nevada and Arizona, and during the present hot wave. Men are especially benefited by this treatment on account of the thinness of their skulls, caused by tightly fitting hats, as compared to those of women with their more abundant hair and perfectly ventilated hats. Be governed accordingly and suffer no more from this unusual summer heat and consequent loss of sleep. The dampness of the cloth will positively relieve and congested, inflammation or catarrhal conditions, either or all of which are the sources of the annoyance.

There is an ice famine in Treviso. The supply gathered during the winter months by local dealers is now exhausted, and the nearby plant for producing the artificial kind is unable to manufacture more than a score of cakes per day. These are distributed by three wagons and although the portions are small and cost but five cents each, many families are not supplied. It is stated that ice can not be procured from the usual Pennsylvania plant of supply, which includes the plant at Neshaminy Falls and as a consequence our people are really in a bad way for this summer necessity. The local dealer in ice cream is obliged for the present to cancel all his orders for that grateful delicacy, as it is impossible for him to keep the cream feed. And so it is back to the spring house of our ancient forefathers, deeply under the cellar, or the beef and butter "way down in the well." Well this latter method is much in vogue in California.

Burglars broke into a tool shed owned by Harry Watson, a builder, of Fallington, at Riverview, early Tuesday morning and made a haul of tools worth $200.

By this simple method sleep will come, and the waking hour will find one greatly refreshed. This is the simple and efficacious remedy used by the writer upon the western plains and across the deserts of Colorado, Utah, Nevada and Arizona, and during the present hot wave. Men are especially benefited by this treatment on account of the thinness of their skulls, caused by tightly fitting hats, as compared to those of women with their more abundant hair and perfectly ventilated hats. Be governed accordingly and suffer no more from this unusual summer heat and consequent loss of sleep. The dampness of the cloth will positively relieve and congested, inflammation or catarrhal conditions, either or all of which are the sources of the annoyance.

There is an ice famine in Treviso. The supply gathered during the winter months by local dealers is now exhausted, and the nearby plant for producing the artificial kind is unable to manufacture more than a score of cakes per day. These are distributed by three wagons and although the portions are small and cost but five cents each, many families are not supplied. It is stated that ice can not be procured from the usual Pennsylvania plant of supply, which includes the plant at Neshaminy Falls and as a consequence our people are really in a bad way for this summer necessity. The local dealer in ice cream is obliged for the present to cancel all his orders for that grateful delicacy, as it is impossible for him to keep the cream feed. And so it is back to the spring house of our ancient forefathers, deeply under the cellar, or the beef and butter "way down in the well." Well this latter method is much in vogue in California.

Burglars broke into a tool shed owned by Harry Watson, a builder, of Fallington, at Riverview, early Tuesday morning and made a haul of tools worth $200.

Positive relief from excessive heat of whatever degree can be promptly had by a wet cloth applied to the top of the head and allowed to remain there during the day, if practicable. The fabric need not necessarily be ice cold, although that condition is arduously more pleasant. A piece of dry or only disagreeably damp, with no air stirring, the same relief can be obtained by keeping a wet cloth upon the front part of the head. By this simple method sleep will come, and the waking hour will find one greatly refreshed.
